The Special Missions system of Operation: Tango - if you let it go - will see you as a person of global importance. The more you save, the more you save. More people dying in a terrorist attack or crashing on your plane will increase your Security Level, meaning you'll have greater access to powerful weapons and technology. The game was released on September 17, 2013 for PC, Mac OS X and Linux. Operation: Tango is a clever and engaging game on both sides of the screen as it blends classes, weapons, and combat. Combining a top-down tactical view with a two-player party chat screen, Operation: Tango quickly pulls you into the cockpit of a fighter plane in space as you and a partner combat enemy fighters, bombers, and killer drones. From the start, Operation: Tango won me over with its simple and universal controls. In this game, the goal is simple - save the world. You control a fighter-jet flying through waves of enemy craft and must choose which missiles to fire to ensure the player doesn't crash. In the arcade mode, your survival relies on your ability to dodge enemy attacks as you try to reach a nearby planet and land. Of course, it's not just missile defense - you can use the sleek fighter-jet to take out your enemies. From the moment of purchase, you're doing plenty of jet-helicopter bombing in this game. Flaming bombs, rockets, and Gatling cannons give you the ability to destroy or inflict damage on your opponents. To draw your enemies in for a ground-level attack, get some of your teammates to the ground and create a divide in the sky. You can then use your jet's jetwings to rise and crash on them as you fly back up. You'll also need to take advantage of your jet's saucer guns. By rotating your jet into the required position, you can fire a stream of lasers at your target. You can also move your jet into position to fire a ground attack laser. I really enjoyed the ability to share a plane with a second player. In the campaign, you'll meet new enemies, earn new fighters, and unlock new levels. In the arcade mode, things are a little bit more difficult. Still,

this is by far my favorite mode. The difficulty curve is also easy to navigate. I started the game thinking it was the standard arcade mode for me. However, after a bit of play, I started to notice the enemy fighters.

, Writer and Puppet's Theater Director. I was 13 the first time I kissed a girl. It was my "Princess in Peasant Costume". She and three friends came to my boarding school to sing for the rest of the 6th grade. I was too shy to say anything or ask about them visiting. They were beautiful, well dressed, and spoke English as a second language. We stumbled at the rehearsal and seated themselves on cushions scattered about the floor. I stood a few feet behind them, afraid to sit down and afraid to ask them to move. They finished their song and walked away. Sleeping in school, I was waiting for the last bell to ring and the girls to leave. Then I heard them talking.

They were getting ready to go to their sleighs in the backyard. The window opened and the three seemed to float out. I thought they should at least ask me to walk with them. After all, I had avoided their practice before, so I wasn't sure why. I was too nervous to say anything and failed to ask them to walk. When they walked away, I decided to pretend to be asleep because the lights were on and there were candles in my room. They seemed far away. The teacher stood watch for some time and then collected all of our candles and filed them in his desk. I didn't want to get up so I stayed still in the dark. The girls had left. I wanted to find out where they lived. Hiding in my closet, I snuck out. I knew their sleigh driver lived in the next street. I knew he would tell me where they lived. He was the first person I spoke to. He was an elderly fellow. I couldn't speak English very well, so I tried to say one thing at a time. One thing led to another and it was the first night in my new home. It was a lovely night: The Northern Lights, 8 inches of snow, and I was thrown out of school for truancy to sneak out in the dead of the night to kiss these beautiful girls. And I lay the next morning in my bed and told myself that it was a horrible blunder and I should NOT repeat those four words. They were half a world away and becoming sisters to me. I kept that pledge, but it was discovered when I grew up. And I closed all my doors, like a nuclear bunker, and I began opening them again. Now
