There are 7 worlds in URG. There are a total of 4 missions and 12 different types of enemies in URG. There are a total of 19 secret areas in URG. There are a total of 15 achievements in URG. There are a total of 10 vehicles in URG. The bottom lineThe shooting in URG is simple, but very precise. There are three types of enemy: blue barrels, red spheres, and purple cubes. A blue barrel explodes after being hit by more than one player's weapons fire. A red sphere explodes when it has been hit more than once by a player's weapon fire. And a purple cube explodes when it has been hit by a total of four weapons fire. The game UI is minimal. It shows the players current weapon power, ammunition count, and health. A timer on the right shows how much time remains in a level. If you leave the game while it is running, or press the P-button, the game will tell you how much time remains and which level you were playing. My biggest complaint about URG is the difficulty. There's no random enemy placement in the game. There are no save points in the game. If you die, you have to start the level over from the beginning. If you collect enough sidekick hearts, you can respawn at your last save point, but if you haven't collected enough hearts, then you lose everything. I just finished my first playthrough of URG on normal, and I haven't beat it yet. I'm pretty sure that I will beat it in 2-3 hours. It was pretty fun, but I had a little bit of difficulty getting used to the controls. But I didn't expect any difficulty in getting used to the game's controls. I have to say that URG is probably the most important game I have ever played. I don't just mean it because it is the first game I ever made. The game has changed the way I play video games. It's such an important game to me that it's my entry in the Create a Game Competition, in which I am writing a review of URG. I played the original version of the game, but I played it on SuperNES. I didn't play the original game on SuperNES, because I was too young to play it. Now I'm older and I remember that game. When I played it on SuperNES, I was wondering what
