HLA-DPRA and HIV infection in a Chinese population. This study was conducted to examine whether non-HLA genes are associated with susceptibility or protection against HIV-1 infection. DNA samples from 175 HIV-infected Chinese were sequenced at the HLA loci. HLA alleles were identified by PCR sequence-specific oligonucleotide probe method. A panel of eight non-HLA polymorphisms previously associated with HIV-1 infection was tested by polymerase chain reaction-single strand conformation polymorphism. These polymorphisms include C2, C4A, C4B, C5, SAP, serum amyloid P, Plasminogen Activator Inhibitor-1, and TNF+308. Six non-HLA gene loci (C2, C4A, C4B, C5, SAP, and Plasminogen Activator Inhibitor-1) were polymorphic with a heterozygosity of 0.36, 0.42, 0.084, 0.022, 0.32, and 0.012, respectively. We detected the DRB1*0101/1402 variant to be the most prevalent DR allele. The proportions of the TNF+308 variant allele were significantly different

Wait for the process is completed and EnjoyNow Commenting On: No clear favorite for Gold Glove at second By Mark Bowman / MLB.com | ARLINGTON -- In addition to revealing the top defensive performers in the American League over the last 12 months, the BBWAA will select the Gold Glove for the 2015 season on Nov. 12 in Los Angeles. One of the biggest snubs of last year was the Gold Glove selection for an American League second baseman, when Robinson Cano, Dustin Pedroia and Elvis Andrus were grouped at the second spot on the AL ballot. One NL second baseman -- Andrus -- also finished atop the NL ballot and was considered the most deserving of a Gold Glove. But the other NL winner, Hanley Ramirez, was noticeably absent from the ballots. Last year, Pedroia got much of the credit for the Red Sox being in first place by April. He ended up winning his third Gold Glove. "The first thing I thought when they announced it was that I didn't think they were going to pick me to win," Pedroia said after Boston's 2-0 win over the Tigers on Wednesday. "I thought the guy they were going to vote for [Cano] was going to win. Then it came out that I was voted second. "It's unfortunate because I felt like I deserved it, but I thought I was going to win it. I was pretty pissed. Cano is a great player. I knew he was going to win, but I thought I would have been the one to win the Gold Glove [for second base]. But it's history now. I'm glad it's over with." It probably will not be over for Andrus, who received four of the 12 votes for the Gold Glove. But the fact that none of the six NL second basemen received even a single vote could be a sign of things to come this year. The top six finishers at the position on the NL ballot were the Cardinals' Matt Carpenter, the Cubs' Starlin Castro, the Reds'
