Long ago, there was a light from beyond the darkness. In fear and hatred, the Elyon conjured a demon, the Zera, to take the light from the Otherworld and cast it into our world. This brought forth the grim Re'Drak creatures and ultimately the evil of the Dark Ones. Elyon cursed them with immortality and doomed them to exist within a perpetual cycle of slaughtering each other for all eternity. In Hell, the Zera spawned the soul of a shattered god and split it into 5 demonic beings who bent the world to their will. The void has been spreading for some time now, the mysterious light from beyond the dark slowly washing away the Black Moire Mountains, exposing the twisted landscape of its dark secret. The Rebel Legion are the resistance, fighting to save the world from the void as the Light-Being Conspiracy fights to prevent Re'Drak from taking over Hell once more. Out of nowhere, an army of creatures from beyond the darkness has risen and begun to destroy everything in their path as they march on the outlying villages, executing their twisted plan of conquest. You play the role of the last Legionnaire left, living on the edge, waiting for the next event to happen. What is it? What's new:

Sea of Blood is a 1981 American action thriller film directed by Lauro Villalobos, produced by Dino De Laurentiis, and starring Klaus Kinski, Al Martino, and Roman Polanski. The soundtrack was composed by Ennio Morricone. Plot NC Police Officer Hank Woodard hunts a serial killer for a child molesting police captain. He arrests local juvenile delinquent Lorenzo "Lefty" Tremonte (Al Martino), who is suspected of killing recently widowed police captain George James (Kenneth MacDonald). Lorenzo insists he didn't do it. A groggy judge sentences Lorenzo to life imprisonment, saying when he reaches prison he'll be "fine". While looking over arrest records, Woodard finds notes from the killer, but he can't find the flesh-eating phobia that the notes contain. After learning the notes may be from Lefty, Woodard learns that Lefty's brother Lenny was a college acquaintance of a wealthy doctor who liked to play golf. The doctor was killed by the serial killer and the victim's mother wrote the notes in a cryptic manner to confuse Woodard. While playing golf at the newly built country club, Dr. Walters (Lauro Villalobos) tells his suitor Nora (Cynthia Gibb), "There's a lot to be gained by knowing when to walk away." Dr. Walters' driver Trevor (Michael Stone) is smitten with Nora. Woodard tracks the doctor's decomposed body to a local hillside where an old man named Cachmer (Klaus Kinski) tells the police he was a clerk at the club and reported a robbery where the victim's mummified body was stolen. In a back room of Cachmer's print shop, marked by red handprints and bodiless heads, Woodard finds three more notes, noting a final note containing the chilling line, "When the dead speak the dead are deaf and blind." Woodard tracks Lefty in a bar where he meets a sadistic hooker named Thelma (Gila Golan), but she's too afraid to murder him, so she tells him the killer is making them fall in love to catch them while the killer incapacitates his victims. Lefty explains his court-ordered life sentence is a cruel joke: while in prison he served as a guard at a looney bin for which a popular female convict garnered the nickname "The Fang." Lefty gets Nora to visit the Fang, she
